DEDICATION

In all solemnity, and with the deepest sense of truth, we respectfully dedicate this book to De Witt Clinton: a staunch monument of American democracy in our time.

A. Mortimer Clark, Principal

TO THE MEN OF THE CLASS OF JANUARY 1939:

You have now come not to the end but to the beginning of the road. The time that you have spent with us has been a period of preparation, and it is our fondest hope that it has been a period of preparation for life. The things that you have learned here, you will not long remember. The habits that you have acquired here will probably survive throughout your lifetime. It is, therefore, important to you and in no small degree to us that these habits be good ones.

We hope that we have taught you to stand upon your own two feet and to take whatever comes with courage in your hearts and no whining on your lips. We hope that we have somehow trained you to see the truth and to know its value. Above all things, we desire that you have learned here to shun chicanery and to despise it. We want you always to be intelligent, free souls, advocating and carrying on through successive stages of improvement the practical application of the ideals of American democracy. We hope that you are leaving us reasonable beings, not men swayed by passion. We hope that you are a peace-loving group but ready to fight in the cause of righteousness.

Wherever you may go and whatever may fall to your hands to do, we of the faculty extend to you our best wishes. We have faith that in the struggle which confronts you, your characters will grow. We believe that eventually you will find happiness.

AMONG MY SOUVENIRS

Red and black. It lies on the bed, stuffed high upon the shelf of a musty closet, hanging in glory from the wall of a room, perched on the head of any senior through the years. It is only a hat you say. Only a hat. Forty-five cents of corduroy with small black numerals '39 sewn on a red background; yet this hat has woven about it an epic of spirit, pathos—life.

Through four full and hearty years you worked and laughed and felt bitter sorrow, five hours a day. Day after day, stopless but for holidays and week-ends, you lived here and stamped an imprint that the years will never wipe away. It was yours. You saw the green grass, and the massive grey walls, and you heard the echoes in the halls; you grew into a part of every grass blade, every piece of granite, and the wood and steel of this school pieced together and you knew them to be in your bones.

You might have sneered about spirit as a thing that never existed. On top you did. A smooth show of maturity and manliness; below this top layer, though, every last one of us feels the tingle piercing our spines, when a dis-jointed strain of Alma Mater quivers through the air, and rolls into the depths of the auditorium, across the far-flung halls, or across the brown turf of the football stadia. We stop as though shot; thousands of boys feel the huge spirit, and are wrapped into it as one, molding unspoken words in a throbbing union.

The crumpled hat lies on the bed. Red and black. It is a living, eternal symbol of De Witt Clinton.

FACULTY

Lateness is a trait quite scorned
By teachers in their classes.
But when the teacher's late, O boy!
How quick that lesson passes.

Alone

When the ship started to sink and the water trickled across the imitation marble floor, the eleven people in the lounge decided to leave immediately. They climbed the dampened stairs to the deck and then piled into one of the white-washed lifeboats.

They were already on the water when the ship went under. Great globs of oil and grease rose to the surface, and the water swelled and burbled. They floated for days, weakened and sickened by the monotonous, continuous lulling and swaying, dizzied by the glaring green of the water. On the thirteenth day they spied a floating mound, a sandy desert island. . . .

And then the eleven Clinton faculty members shouted with joy; and splashing into the water, swam to the island.

* * * * *

"Doc" Guernsey, the wittiest of them all, was the first to reach land. "My, what a spot we're in!" he exclaimed. "This is a beach of a place!" A moment later Mr. Joseph Ross, the most versatile member of the Clinton faculty, reached shore. Immediately he built a fire by rubbing together two branches, erected a three-story lean-to, and caught and trained a squirrel so that it could repeat the "Preamble to the Constitution" backwards.

Mr. Milton J. Belasco reached the island a few moments later. "Is there anything I can do?" he asked anxiously, "I'm a very hard worker, you know!"

"And what about me?" demanded Mr. William Lichtenstein, as he crawled out of the water onto the beach. "I'm the most industrious, you know. I can learn to cook, sew, fish, or climb trees . . . "

"If you really want to help us so much," interrupted "Doc" Guernsey, "you can look for Mr. Ginsberg and Mrs. Miriam Goepfert, the best-dressed teachers. Nobody has seen them . . . "

Together

"I've seen them," exclaimed Mr. Lichtenstein. "Mr. Ginsberg is on the north side of the island and Mrs. Goepfert is on the south side. They're hiding in the bushes, I believe, as their clothes are drying on the beach. They don't want to put up a bad appearance, you know . . . "

"Well, if you can answer that, tell us where Mr. Robert Hanley, the most handsome man teacher and Miss Helen Mitsch, the prettiest woman teacher, can be . . . "

"Oh, I'll tell you that," said Mr. Philipson, who'd been spending his time telling Mr. Ross how glad he was that he'd never have to give any tests any more. "They're down at a pond, looking in the water and combing their hair. They want to live up to their reputations, I suppose."

But Dean Foote, who had meanwhile arrived and taken charge of the proceedings, decided that he, as most cooperative, and Mr. Belasco, the hardest worker, should chip in and help search for "Doc" Kwit, the most beloved Clinton teacher, who was nowhere to be found.

Just then the nine people heard a great burst of laughter. They ran to a clearing and saw Dean Robert L. McIndoe, most affable, and Mr. Jason Knox, the best natured, rolling on the ground in their laughter.

"What's wrong?" asked "Doc" Guernsey anxiously.

Mr. McIndoe could hardly speak. "You think you're on a desert island, don't you . . . "

"Of course!" they chorused.

"Well—you are!" And then he and Mr. Knox started laughing all over again.

ACTIVITIES

Committees, games, and the "senior chatter"
Service record growing fatter
Clintonian, Class Nite, lots of knowledge
Before he's started, he's off to college.

It Ain't Necessarily So

Being of sane mind and sound body, we, the Senior Class of De Witt Clinton High School of January 1939, do hereby bequeath

To Mr. A. M. Clark — We leave a school that will do better things upon our departure.

To "Doc" Guernsey — We leave an electric razor of perpetual motion.

To Mr. Belasco — We leave the hope for a Class Nite show by a new author.

To Mr. Osborne — We leave a picture of Walt Disney's dwarf "Happy."

To Mr. Stenson — We leave a rubber stamp marked "100%."

To Mr. Lichtenstein — We leave a Clintonian out of the red. (We hope.)

To Mr. Ginsberg — We leave a G.O. discount card to Barney's. 7th Avenue and 17th Street.

To Dr. Kwit — We leave a new handful of clay sevens to be moulded into senior puppets.

To Mr. McIndoe — We leave a new senior class which we hope will have more athletic teams than we did.

To the School — We leave one-slice bologna sandwiches, a delightful triple session, and the hope for a stadium—we should care!

To the Sevens — We leave Dean Foote, Dean McIndoe, "Doc" Guernsey, "M.J." Belasco, Misses Mitsch, Grief, and Ruderman—much to our regret!

Signed and sealed in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine on the thirty-first day of January.

SENIOR CLASS OF JANUARY 1939

FOUR YEARS

NEVER BEFORE IN THE ANNALS OF THE CLINTONIAN HAS AN ATTEMPT BEEN MADE BY A BOY, NOW A SENIOR, TO SET DOWN HIS FEELINGS AND EMOTIONS THROUGH FOUR YEARS. WE OFFER IT TO YOU AS AN HONEST, SINCERE EFFORT TO DESCRIBE THE EFFECTS AND INFLUENCES CLINTON HAS HAD ON ONE OF US.

Quivering, cold, afraid, and dressed in baggy knickers . . . trudging up to the main entrance that blistery, snow a-foot-deep-high day in February '35 . . .

What will it be? Will they like me? How should I act? . . . grown up, brave, don't let them see how scared . . . ready to let the tears stream out . . . I've got to bite my lip and hold them in: even if it bleeds, they have to see not a bawling kid, but one that has the guts to bite off half a lip to keep from sobbing . . .

LUNCH-ROOM OFFICERS

A herd of cattle . . . little men . . . stuffed into a room. This is it. Clinton . . . right smack in the midst of it . . . "Stop that talking!" . . . "This is high school, not a nursery!" . . . "Program." . . . Where? . . . What? . . . When? . . . How? . . . numbers dancing before my eyes . . . 1st period . . . 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 . . . a hundred million names, noises, teachers . . . notebook . . . "G.O." cut rate . . . French . . . Civics . . . Science . . . the whole works tumbling, crashing down . . . Delaney Cards . . . music . . . P.T. . . . uniform, sneakers, lock, pants, socks . . . a whirling, maddened jumble screaming into time and space. . . .

The months ride by on swift wings . . . system slowly . . . smoothing . . . calming . . . Do I know what it's all about? . . . Senior, that's the great thing . . . Will I ever get there? . . . month: March . . . clean, crisped, windy, the grass full-blown, waving down the length of Mosholu . . . April: mid-terms . . . cramming . . . burning that midnight oil . . . Easter, a rest, long hours out of it all . . . May: days flitting with sun-shadows playing against the slate walls of Clinton . . . June: warm, languid, polishing off the subjects with finesse, the heat and smell and electric rumbling of the el.

SERVICE LEAGUE OFFICERS

The last days of school, with two months ahead of the cool green water; tennis; baseball; out in the fresh hot sun: knowing, feeling, hoping, as swarms of thought whirl inside my brain . . . June ends: like a sheet of steel blocking off the rest: throwing sparks on the shimmering hot unknown future. . . .

Fourteen years of being alive. A boy alive: a million of them in every country, of every race, creed, religion, and I am one. It is all flung wide and far but is still a mystery to me. Death. What is it? Beyond; is there one? I die; years from now, crushed by a car, heart, lung, liver, why do I have to die? Fourteen years of life.

Parties . . . girls, the weenie roast, ping-pong, back, back, sitting on the steps the first long, rainy, fog-black day. . . .

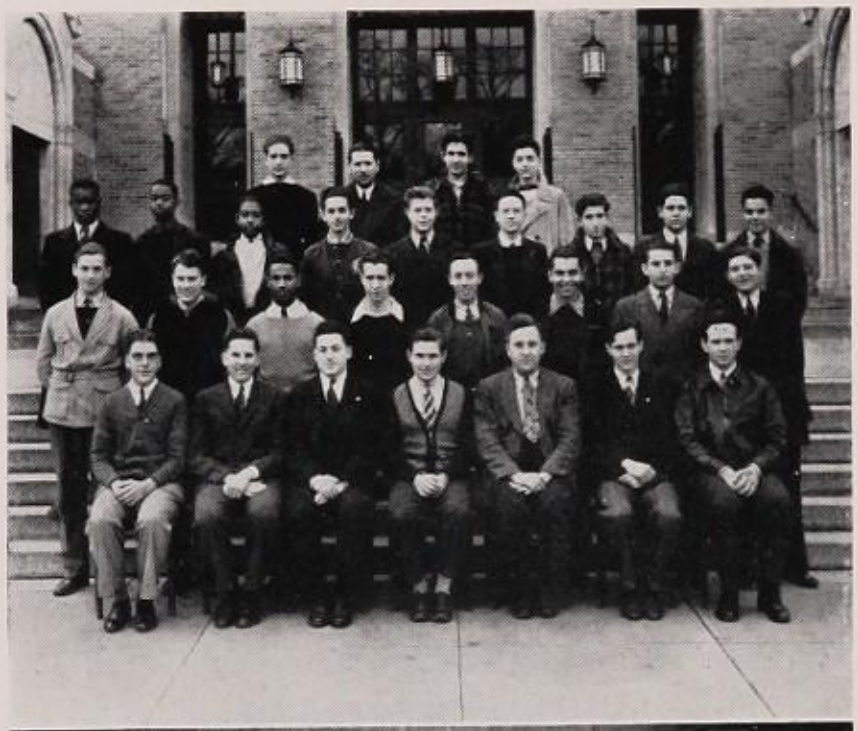
"Fight team fight." . . . "De Witt C." . . . the football team cracks through . . . no time to think . . . in school and out: day upon day upon day . . . marks . . . work, work, work . . . swinging through with time, hard, tough, blocking out everything but the pen and smell of text-book paper . . . Then:

Armistice, Thanksgiving, a stretch of flat grind . . . Christmas . . . "Merry New Year!" . . . Two parties . . . right back . . . A bullet shot through the third term . . . mechanical, I've done it, every minute, hour, steady, pounding, pouring, beating, ink and rulers, plunging it into me, English, French, Bio, learning, drilling, exploding the old thought, rivers of the new one streaming down into my brain, a cross-current of millions of minutes, atoms, numbers, I am spinning in a roaring stream. . . .

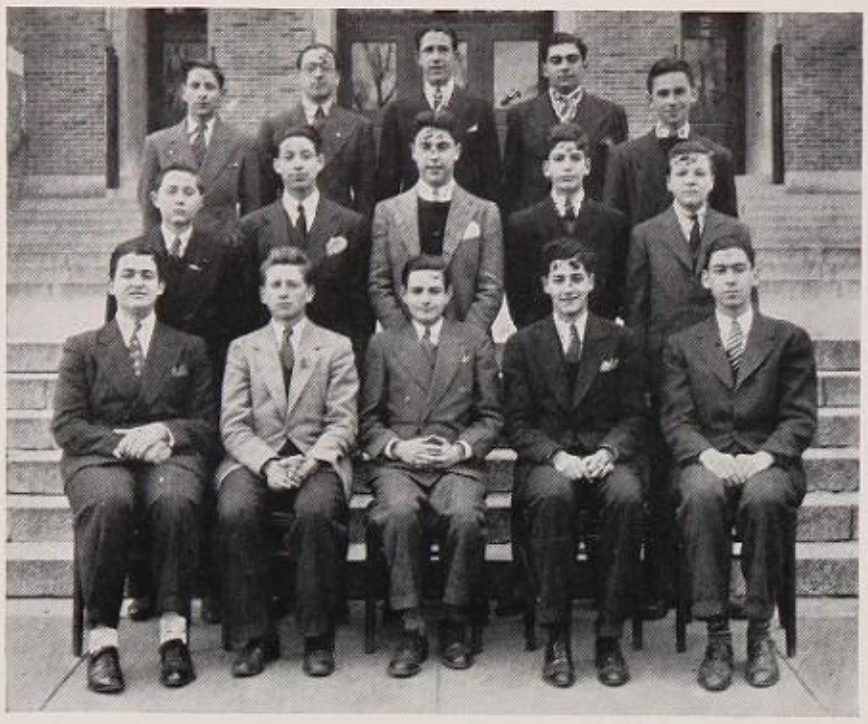
June dies suddenly at this giddy pace: the last day, the last night, dancing, parties, girls, cigarettes on the side: the twelfth . . . sixteenth . . . August, smacking time in the face. . . .

September, spinning into the two-year mark . . . a clacking roulette of kaleidoscopic speed and color . . . "The Red-and-Black!" . . . S.L. men . . . football practice . . . eating dirt . . . hitting them down into the cleat-ground green . . . Spirit . . . Drive . . . Burning . . . sweating your guts away two hours in the cold, rain-soaked afternoons . . . classes tumbling into one: think what it's all about, a stop, time to make it clear, to understand, but no, not now, you've got to keep socking, plugging, tearing, no rest, it's just one, two, three, four, up and down, like a robot. . . .

LATE SQUAD



LIBRARY SQUAD



G. O. EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

December, the cold, freezing bite of the winds . . . November, stiff stalks of Harvest wheat and turkey . . . October, long twilight shadows—

My God, what happened to yesterday?

Like a revolving door: "Happy Christmas!" New Year . . . same girls . . . same soft hair, and lips . . . same parties. . . .

But where are those streaming ideas: those pungent first-term ideals? Those mature, massive thoughts of death, beyond—

Buried down deep beneath the speed and tearing color of the days.

Sunday night . . . a solemn night, quiet, time to relax and understand . . . Now under the yellow glow of the lamp, in the aloneness of the kitchen with pencil and paper before me and text books stacked on the bare surface of the table . . . I can work diligently, catch up with those lost hours of waste and speed and girls; I can write down the numbers with slowness and thought.

Yelling from the window . . . "Party." Come down and join the fun, free for all, swell time, swell gal, "Hey, you gonna glue your eyes to those books for the rest of your life?" . . . A split-second of thought. To go or not to go, that is the question. (Smooth crack.) . . . Slamming the books. "Coming boys, be right down." On the dark stairs, step by step, smoothing the new grey fedora . . . Why am I going? Why? . . . The throbbing beat of conscience: Heading for an awful fall, a crack-up, it's coming, coming, coming, take it easy, watch your step . . . No . . . not me . . . shake it off . . . "Here I am boys, rarin' to go." . . . Back late, no home work done, the sour taste of cigarettes, throw myself on the bed. You've done it. . . .

Unprepared again . . . zero, zero, zero, mounting on the record-books . . . no work done, snap out of it: conscience battering in that hidden corner of my brain . . . DAY OF RECKONING. . . .

Out of the future, the midterm, the final week of plunging across . . . Cram . . . cram . . . biting on the sharp pencil point . . . Outline. Review. I've got to pass . . . Got to. . . .

It's come: FLUNK, 2 out of 5. How can I face them: mother, dad, excuse, what to say? Somehow the days pass, and everything smooths itself out. I think, slowly, carefully, now. What have I accomplished: football, S.L. Squad, what can they mean with a 72 average?

Have I any real teacher-friends? Do the fellows like me; or are they only pretending? Have I lived fully? Is there an improvement? What have I done with two-and-a-half years? Thirteen to fifteen: I have been in the Service League, the football squad; and a 72 average. I used to think when I was in first term. I didn't know what a cigarette tasted like then. I didn't know girls, I was shy, blushing like the devil when I spoke to anyone. I couldn't dance; I was blunt. . . .

Dad, tell me about myself . . . Shrewd, matured, father sinks back in his chair . . . Five . . . Ten minutes pass quietly, softly . . . long-thought-of words that seem to flow from him . . . I sit and listen: true, telling words, clear advice, the first real wisdom in these two years.

From eight till ten. The first hours I've spent with my dad in a long while. Thanks. That's all I can say or think. Thanks, dad.

Over two months, the long Summer cools and hardens my thoughts: time to think things out, to understand the fundamentals of good and bad. Time to appreciate my mother and dad; time to realize their sacrifices; time to strengthen vivid new ideals. Time: time to look ahead: to make them proud: to crystalize some glowing ambition.

Like diving from a high steeple into the rushing water, chilling you, awakening, cold, rude, biting, hurling you back into the shuffle of boys. September opening, school lying waiting ripe, for you to cut it open and drink the juice of success. . . . One among tens, hundreds, thousands of boys. . . . I've got to fight to it through, to study and plug, to rise up, up, up, to battle through a maze of obstacles: the past, clogging memories, understanding the teachers as human beings; serious, clean, hacking a path onward. . . . The marks flowing in like good clear water, the reaping of efforts.

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

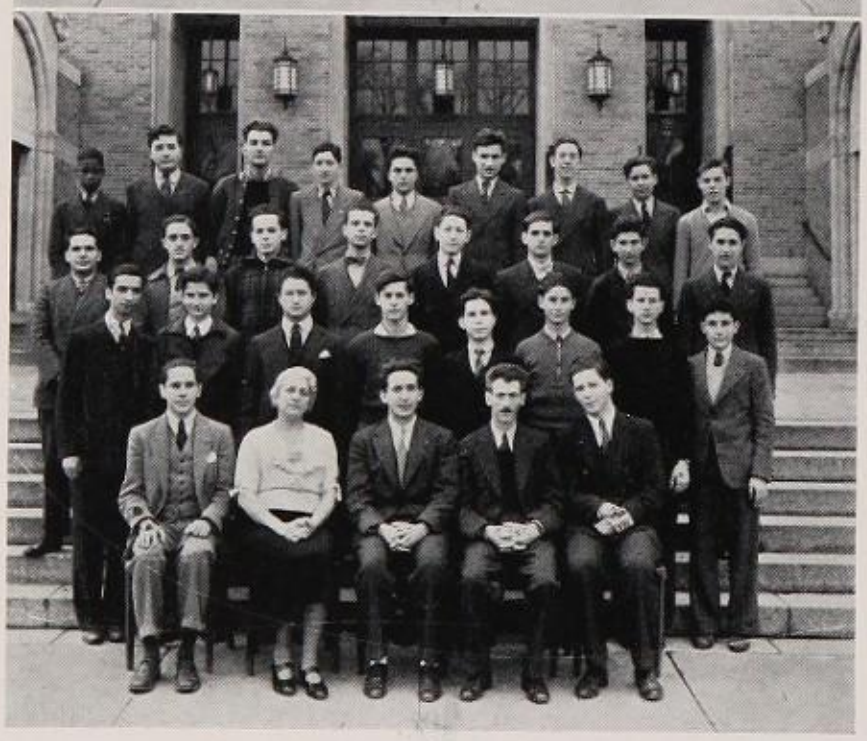
Like a bolt "THIRTY SHOPPING DAYS TO CHRISTMAS" time, so swift, not understanding, not sympathetic, but ripping off the days, cruelly, like tearing pages from a calendar.

Christmas . . . New Year's once more, eternal but with an 85 average, that gives the holidays a new light—–

* * * *

Looking back now, I remember the drive and life and red-blooded pounding in my veins, to get back, to go on, and achieve some coveted goal that year at school. . . . Then the car smashing against my legs . . . the crumble of blackness . . . the ambulance . . . the plaster cast which hoisted my broken limbs high over the hospital bed. . . . Three months I lay there eating, sleeping, reading little, lying motionless and following the clouds with my eyes from the window . . . the pain in my father's eyes . . . he, who with his simple voice and stolid, sacrificial guidance had hoisted one out of the rut. . . . I remember, also, the second-hand knowledge gleaned from old books . . . the few real friends, sitting on the bed and slowly, patiently, going over the work with me. . . . How quickly it sped; prepared for the exams, passed with more than the skin of my teeth; the term in a slow peaceful ending—–—–—

ADULT INSTITUTE SQUAD

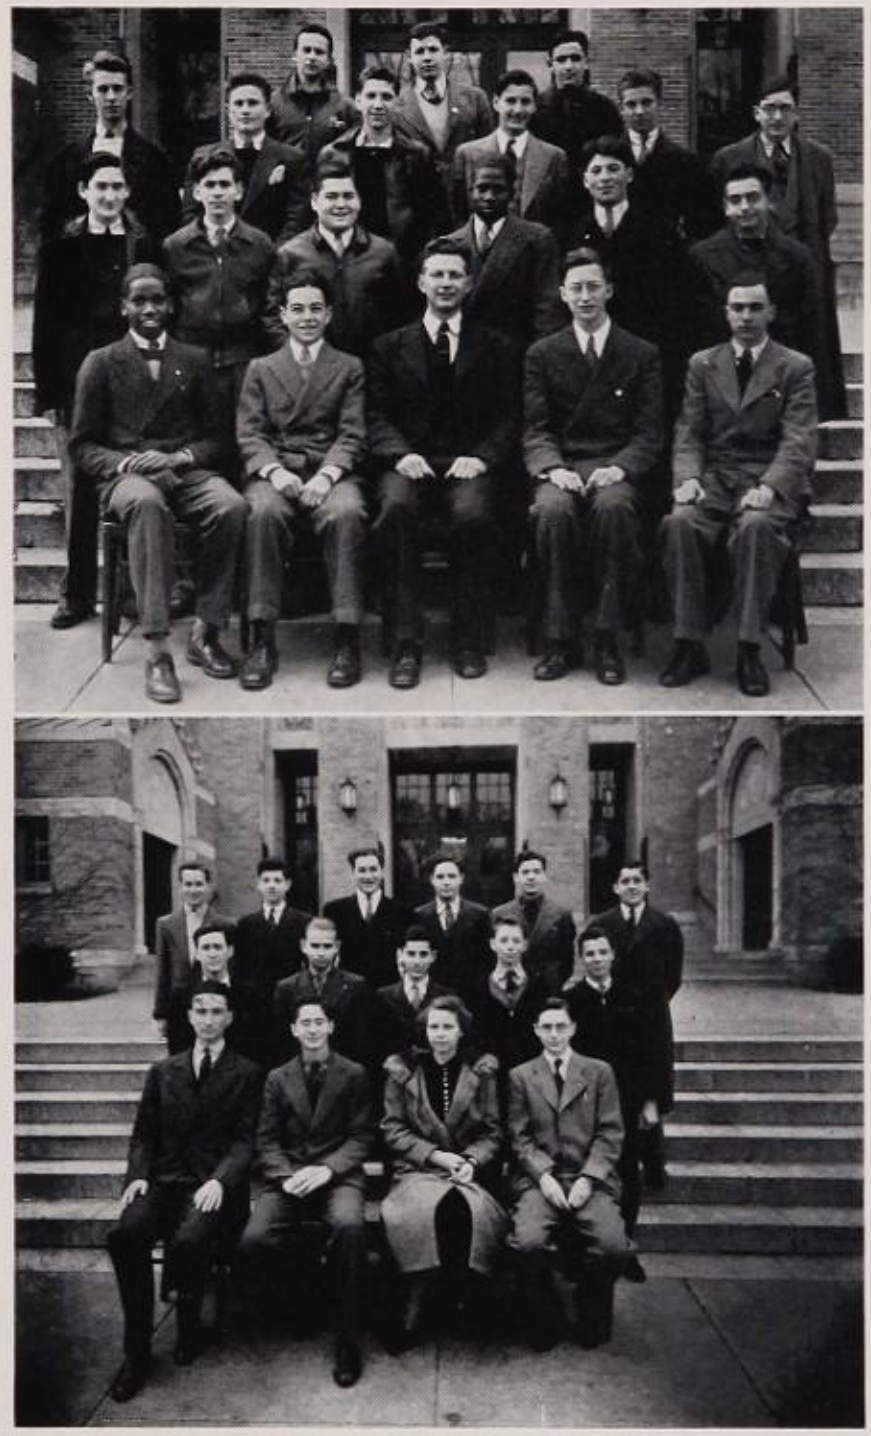


CHEMISTRY SQUAD

I remember regaining my strength during the summer. . . . Slowly nourishing my forgotten limbs. . . . Walking the long miles in the country, over the hot, verdant green of the hills . . . sucking in the rich country air . . . washing away the remains of the accident, and the futile chaos of those first two years.

But here I am, now. Why dig into the past? This is it: the last term, the eighth, my spear at that success which I want. Churning, hard, honest, work. . . . Back in stride. . . . The Senior Presidency: diligently campaigning. . . . Speaking before the full-packed auditorium. . . Hushing, stirring them with the clean power of my voice. . . . Then the night before election: lying awake in bed, turning between the sheets, hoping, dreaming, praying for the first triumph. . . . That morning, the ballots marked, wondering, as they slapped me on the back and wished me luck. . . . Luck: it is no luck, no fate, it means more to me than a wise-crack, it is honest, clear, heart and soul. . . .

CURRENT HISTORY CLUB



ELOCUTION SQUAD

But no: you lose, you take it on the chin, you feel bitter, even hating those around you, the very people who have worked and laughed with you for four full years. But as you brood and meditate in a selfish silence, you look up, over the head of I, I, I: you know then how minute, how blind you have been. From the booming recesses of the radio, the tawdry type of the evening newspaper, and the mechanical black-and-white flash of the newsreel, you see and feel and hear your world being split open, you know the terror and fright that has struck millions of humans, the inerasable gash that has been fired into their hopeless souls.

It thunders into the hidden grey cells in your head: the rape of Czechoslovakia: the blue-barrelled cannon that flaunt their stubbed, death-tongued snouts, and bury millions of Chinese under tons of blood and steel, horror magnetizing them to opium, and shell-shocked imbecility: Spain ripped and gutted: you can hear this incessant, automatic heart-beat of countries and humanity as they spin around the sun.

Yet I can feel my own, individual progress, slowly creeping . . . Senior Committees . . . Class Night . . . Prom . . . Elected a Senior Personality . . . wanting intensely to have them printed, to make them live and burn, to chisel this story black and clear into the walls of Clinton: a living record that may assimilate into the Past but will never die.

PUBLICATIONS

Sing Out The News

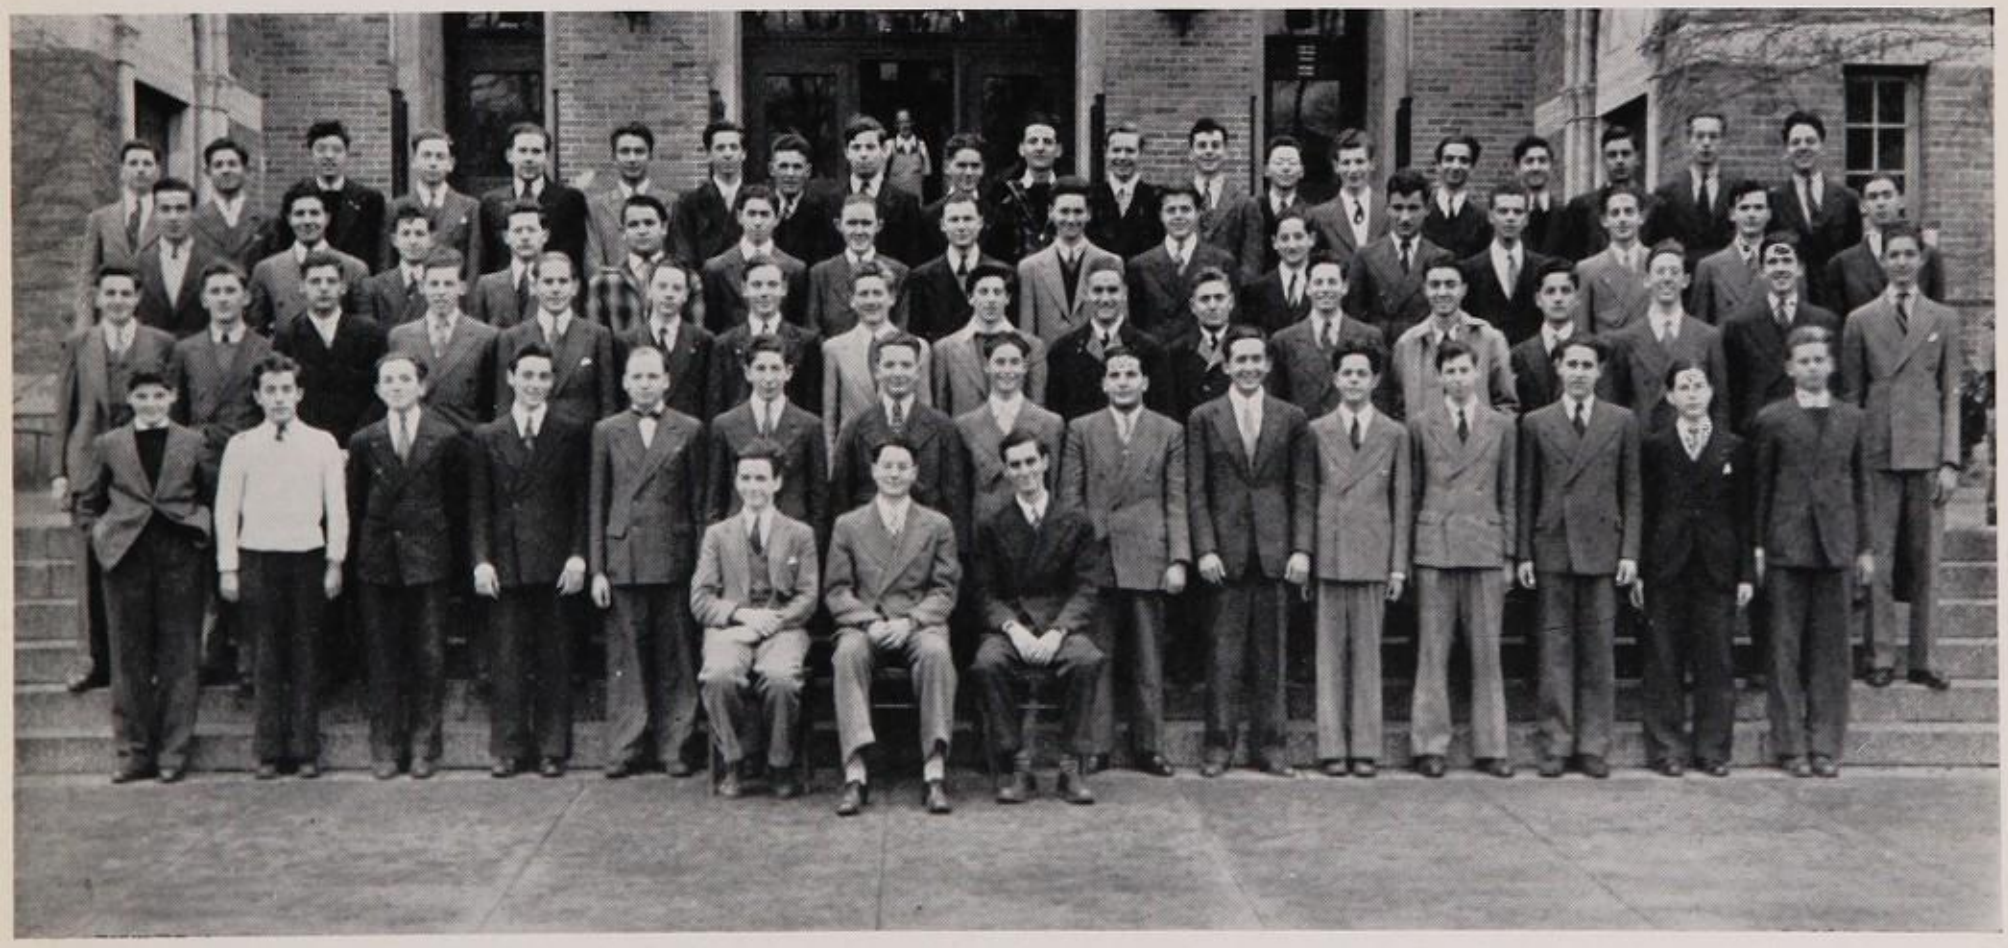
When the bell ended the period he went downstairs to the "News" Office. It was late in the morning and the proofs of the last stories had just come up from the printer. He slumped down into one of the seats and started to read and correct the sheets. . . .

. . . It's boring to read proof . . . (put a capital J in Junior, a comma after dog because dog is the third in a series, draw wavy lines that go to nowhere, jumbled lines to the ink-smeared margins to show the printer that his machine spitted lead into the wrong hole, that the teacher's name is spelt ue and not eu*) . . . and it's deadening to hear the low rasping of voices around you, like water drooling down a clogged pipe . . . "(indent three spaces, new line, Capital U, close quotes, hyphen, capital T, open quotes, comma, dash, comma, capital F . . .)"*

He looked up from the sheet in his hands; in one corner of the room the five graduating members of the Managing Board were huddled around a plan of Page One; Dick Cohen, the small, impetuous Editor-in-Chief; Irv Farbman, the laughing, ebony-haired Sports Editor; Howard Ludlow, the quiet, conservative Annex Page Editor; Jerry Elswit, the gangling, eye-glassed Headlines Editor; and Don Leight, the diligent, moderate Tryout instructor . . .

They were trying to squeeze, to juice a story and make a headline. (The words have to be like putty, so that you can pull them and push them and make them fit the columns; the General Organization stands for nineteen spaces and "Doc" Guernsey for fourteen.) But they couldn't pick the dignified words that were to head the dignified story. Then somebody started to speak about the days when the "News" hadn't been connected with the G.O., when the headlines were slangy and partial; and the others remembered the times even further back . . . When he was through reading he went into the office of the faculty adviser, Mr. Raphael Philipson, to get carfare to go down to the printer . . . When you go to the printer you don't leave there until night; and your hands are black with ink and your eyes red from the continuous reading. When you're through at night, when the first proof has rolled out of the press, you put on your clothes and go home with the other fellows. You're a little thankful that everything has turned out all right, that there are no mistakes; but you're too tired and hungry to laugh or be happy. The next day the staffmen pore over the paper for mistakes; the students skim over it hurriedly and then throw it away.

You sit down with the editor-in-chief and start work on the next issue . . .



East Side, West Side . . .

Up in the Tower, in the room above the music rooms (you sometimes hear the freshmen singing De Witt C), they edit the Magpie.

The room is large, arched windows in every wall, and light and invigorating. In the center of the room are two small tables strewn with students' manuscripts. Around these tables the members of the Magpie read, correct, and criticize . . .

And the Magpie is the magazine with a theme; to entertain and to educate the student, to be clean-cut and vivid, to analyze, to sculpture, to sketch, to chisel, to paint the people, the world . . .

Many years ago, Mr. Raphael Philipson headed the Magpie; even then the Magpie didn't crusade. But the articles were more worldly, less bewildered, less bitter than now . . . before that the Magpie was a tabloid-magazine, smaller, less pretentious . . .

This term the Magpie ideal is "Metropolitan Carnival." The red, the yellow, the blood and the flesh, the paint-pots and the pillories of this city are its subjects. Sidney Chayefsky is the editor-in-chief, Mrs. Marcella Whalen the faculty adviser. . . .

You're An Education In Yourself

—so after a quarter-century of amassing high averages and accumulating extensive service records, Arista decided to prove to the world of Clinton that 95's on a record card needn't dull a basketball eye, nor weaken the effectiveness of a down-field block. Football and basketball teams were born and the skepticism dispelled.

Nevertheless, the value of the society to the school still remained in its services. One of these, organized only last term, has now taken its place as the outstanding contribution of Arista—the help-classes. Taught by Arista boys, the classes are for the benefit of anyone interested in bettering his scholastic situation. After this, there were those activities which by now have become established customs—freshman advisory committees, the publishing of scholarship lists, selling tickets to school functions, and a host of minor occupations.

This term, as an added feature of the usual Arista assemblies, a more pronounced attempt was made to introduce the significance of the group to the school by means of the popular question and answer program.

In charge of the broad plan of action were the three officers, Sanford Kossar, the Leader of Arista, Adrian Duncan, the Vice-Leader, and Milton Sobel, Secretary—all under the ever-present and irrepressible "Doc" Guernsey.

These are the eight-one boys of Arista, less than one per cent of the school:

Stanley Anekstein, Israel Aran, Robert Avigdor, Ralph Berlow, Richard Bimonte, Myron Charlap, Richard Cohen, Robert Cohen, Maxwell Davis, William Deyo, Eugene Diskant, Adrian Duncan, Bert Eisenstadt, Jerome Elswit, Lazar Emanuel, Bernard Friedelson, Herman Gisser, Lawrence Goldstein, Lawrence Gray, Sol Greenberg, Henry Grotta, Irwin Gutelewitz, Robert Handelman, Morton Harfenist, James Harford, Larry Harlam, Leonard Harris, Robert Kahn, Henry Karger, Sanford Kossar, Michael Kozonis, Martin Lehrer, Ira Leventer, Ira Levy, Victor Lubelsky, Adolph Panarelli, Albert Reiner, and Howard Ludlow.

SENIORS

Entering school as a Freshman,
The Senior finds much to be feared.
In four years or more, he's aged to the core.
And leaves Clinton High with a beard.

Mr. Milton J. Belasco

For He's A Jolly Good Fellow

Practically one of the boys! That is the best and only way to describe the popular Mr. Milton J. Belasco. Though comparatively a new member of the faculty, "M.J.," as he is known affectionately to every Senior, has endeared himself everlastingly to the Senior Class. It is he who, unselfishly, spends long hours after school directing and producing that 'gigantic-colossal' production which is our traditional Class Nite.

As a teacher, he is constantly interesting and rates "A-1" with all who know him. Both Senior and undergraduate alike have long found him a staunch friend. He has that admirable trait of being able to stop and listen with interest to the varied tales of students. He has earned undying respect by never once flaunting his position or authority. He is before all things, a friend and a comrade we admire.

Mr. Belasco, while remaining the regular fellow that he is, popularly maintains his dignity and prestige as a member of the faculty.

We have reached the final rung in the ladder. What lies ahead, we know not. That which is past, we will long remember years from today; and in remembering, one man will stand out for his cooperation in making our last term the "best one ever."

Thus, we the Senior Class of January '39, in appreciation, gratefully dedicate our Senior Section to you "M.J." Belasco: Adviser, Teacher, Friend, Scholar and Gentleman.

Harold Solomon, President

Now It Can Be Told

Here we are. After four years of pointing for this goal, we can't have any stage fright now. We've got to step out there in the glow of those footlights and show them the stuff we're made of. This is the last page in our Clinton history; it has to gleam with all the strength, courage and maturity that we have gleaned in the years 1935-1939.

We can see Dean Foote. His white hair is shining under the lights. His kind face is beaming; his perenial bow-tie, his white shirt, his clipped accent; we know him by these things. Simple? Yes. Simple and clear: things that we can put our finger on when four years have rolled into the past, when infinite detail is lost in the shuffle of time; things that cast up a portrait for us when all else is forgotten.

Standing beside Mr. Foote is our other dean. Dean McIndoe: tall, and capable, we can see him beckoning us forward, telling us to lose all fear, to make him proud of his class, to make it symbolize the name Senior.

We come into the ray of light slowly. Quiet settles over the audience broken only by the scraping rustle of paper or a hollow cough: from down in their leather seats they can watch us as we see this term lit up before us in the beams of light . . .

A spirited election that brought a presidency to Hal Solomon . . . a vice-presidency to Howie Warshauer . . . Ed Moskowitz: a keen, reliable Senior Class secretary . . . The Hat; we picked the Ski Hat of red-and-black, with corduroy, and good warm earmuffs . . . Clinton established the Inter-High School Relations Committee for all high schools to engage in intra-school activities . . . The fine football team that dumped Commerce into the mud on Thanksgiving Day . . . "See America First" a grand Class Nite show . . . The organization of the Senior Basketball team; the hours of practice and horseplay in the cold, green locker room . . . The names of Guernsey, blustering, livid, kind and gruff, Hastings, everyone's friend, practical, peering over his spectacles, and Clark, keen and understanding . . . these letters form these names which come roaring to us on the wings of flaming electric spot-lights.

Seniors that high-lighted our term flash across the dark into light. Joe Casale, captain of the football team, working hard and without the publicity that attended the others: Class Athlete. Through a myriad of names and faces we see Bob Leavin, Handsomest Senior, Sid Paisner, snapping his head and weaving his shoulders to an off-beat: Clinton's King of Swing. Then, Irv Farbman, Best Writer in this, our graduating class; Al Panarelli, our Class Politician. There are other names; fine ones too, but they elude us as we stand alone on the stage, waiting, wanting, hoping perhaps, that the names of these classmen won't vanish in, say, five or ten years.

We step forward. This is it. The end. There is no band, no applause, no speech: only a silence that waits for our next move, waits, listening as this Senior Class moves on. In the quiet hall we can hear the world's speech, and we can see its headlines that print the fate of men: WAR: PERSECUTION: FASCISM: COMMUNISM: then across a brink of swirling water, on the other side we can hear this same world echoing with the good of mankind: PEACE: HAPPINESS: DEMOCRACY: LAUGHTER and CHEER: they clash, these opposites, and in the silence we can understand our mission.

We are stepping across the footlights, over the stage, and into the life where men are numbers, masses of them, not personalities, not Seniors or Freshmen, only men. We have our responsibility: we know our determination: across this platform lies our life, and we cross it with short, sure steps.

THESE FOOLISH THINGS REMIND ME OF YOU

This song was in the Class Nite Show. The original lyrics were written by an English composer, but Sherry Cloth adapted it as it is herein printed.

Our years with you, Dear Clinton,
Now are ending
But memories linger on,
In thoughts befriending,
In long unbroken strings.
These foolish things remind me of you.

A lunchroom packed with
Crooked spoon filled faces,
A student dreaming
Of those open spaces.
While time forever clings
These foolish things remind me of you.

We came, prepared.
Our minds were blank.
Our studies were all rank
Until bad marks gave us a yank.

A freshman sent on purpose
To the Tower.
A Senior glowing with
His new found power.
While that old siren sings
These foolish things remind me of you.

Repeat from the middle of the Chorus

Each day, we'd cut
A class of sleep.
We bought our admits cheap
Until we had them by the heap.

A student teacher
Trying to keep order
But her class thinks she's cute
So they applaud her.
And then that swell bell rings.
These foolish things remind me of you.

How Many Rhymes Can You Get...

New York to Jersey City; Jersey City to Kentucky; Kentucky to Oklahoma; then West across the country to California and back again to New York. It was a night of travel; a night of sights; a night of fun. It was Class Nite, presenting a three hour show of mirth, music and American merriment. It was "See America First!" by Sherwin S. Cloth with original tunes by Cloth and Moe Wechsler and directed and produced by Mr. Milton J. Belasco.

You who saw it, found that two tickets and not a road map was what you required for transcontinental sight-seeing. What you saw, however, would never be incorporated in any Cook's Tour for you saw the real McCoy; the scenes behind the scenes.

Maestro Vic Alevy raised his baton for the downbeat . . . the house lights faded . . . the footlights illuminated the stage . . . the curtains parted on a revue of the American scene.

Leaving Grand Central Station in a burst of "gags" we found "Jersey City Justice" hilariously portraying supposed conditions in that city with Al Panarelli as a City Censor.

Then in "Kentucky Kernals" Johnnie Volbrecht did some nice work on a "hot" ocarina while Sid Paisner danced a far from dead "Old Man Mose."

One of the funniest moments to be remembered was Jerry Schoenbaum as "Rosie the Redskin," assisted on the dance steps by Bob Genin and Sid Paisner.

Laughter followed us West as Reno and Hollywood came in for their share of punishment. It was in the Hollywood skit that Ed Silfin, as a Hollywood producer and Ed Brown, as his writer, proved that Class Nites and not motion pictures "are your best entertainment."

To top the evening off with a "bang" the tour brought us back to Mad Manhattan for a riotous "Class in Rhythm." And what a finale that was! Rhymes by Professor Sherry Cloth . . . drum breaks by Gordon Powell . . . songs by Wally Serret and Julie Urban . . . and dancing, dancing, dancing; ending the night in a burst of glory!

What a trip! What a night! What a show! What a . . . well, you get the general idea!

ATHLETICS

Lo! the Clinton hero.
An unassuming son.
He fights for fame in Clinton's name
Applauding what he's done.

CROSS-COUNTRY TEAM

Water Boy!

Rebounding from one of the most disastrous seasons in Clinton's pigskin history, Coach Henry Jacobson's Mosholu Red Raiders compiled an enviable record of six victories and one defeat to regain the Bronx-Upper Manhattan grid title this year.

It was a veteran, revenge-bent team that took the field at Dexter Park against John Adams on October 1; a team that needed a victory to restore its confidence, and likewise was striving to present Coach Jacobson with a triumph in his inaugural as head mentor of Clinton's football forces.

That afternoon Bill Tracy and Helio "Hinkie" Lefkowitz hooked up to defeat the plucky Adams eleven, 6-0 and set the ball rolling for a succession of victories that was climaxed by an 18-0 triumph over Commerce at snow-swept Randall's Island Stadium on Thanksgiving Day.

Following the Adams tilt, Roosevelt bowed 6-3 in a hard fought contest. However, an excellent George Washington team handed the Red and Black its first defeat by a three touchdown margin, 20-0. But the Governors came back. In successive games Evander, Stuyvesant, Monroe, and Commerce were met—and conquered—as the '38 Steamroller rolled to one of its most successful campaigns in history.

SWIMMING TEAM

Turning back the pages of the season's exploits we begin at Dexter Park. Here a City Championship Adams squad fought Clinton to a standstill until late in the final period when "Hinkie" Lefkowitz took Bill Tracy's pass out in the flat and raced to the game's only touchdown.

On October 8 Castle Hill Stadium was the scene of battle—and a real battle it was between the two ancient Bronx rivals, Clinton and Roosevelt. A Teddy Bear field goal by Alex Fleischman gave the Fordham-Roaders an advantage until the fourth quarter. For once again Tracy's pitch to Lefkowitz provided the third strike and Mosholu went off the field a 6-3 victor.

Then came the deluge—in the form of touchdowns propelled across the Clinton goal-line by an alert Washington team that refused to be beaten. Clinton lost the game but won the respect and admiration of all with its plucky fight. It was then that the season's turning point was reached.

On the 22nd of October the long-awaited Clinton-Evander game was played and resulted in a glorious 19-12 victory for Coach Jacobson's lads. In this tussle Tommy Wolfe sped 65 yards for one touchdown and Bill Tracy and "Hinkie" Lefkowitz also tallied, Lefkowitz on a sensational lateral pass from Edgar Bradley. The Gun Hillers scored on two desperate passes.

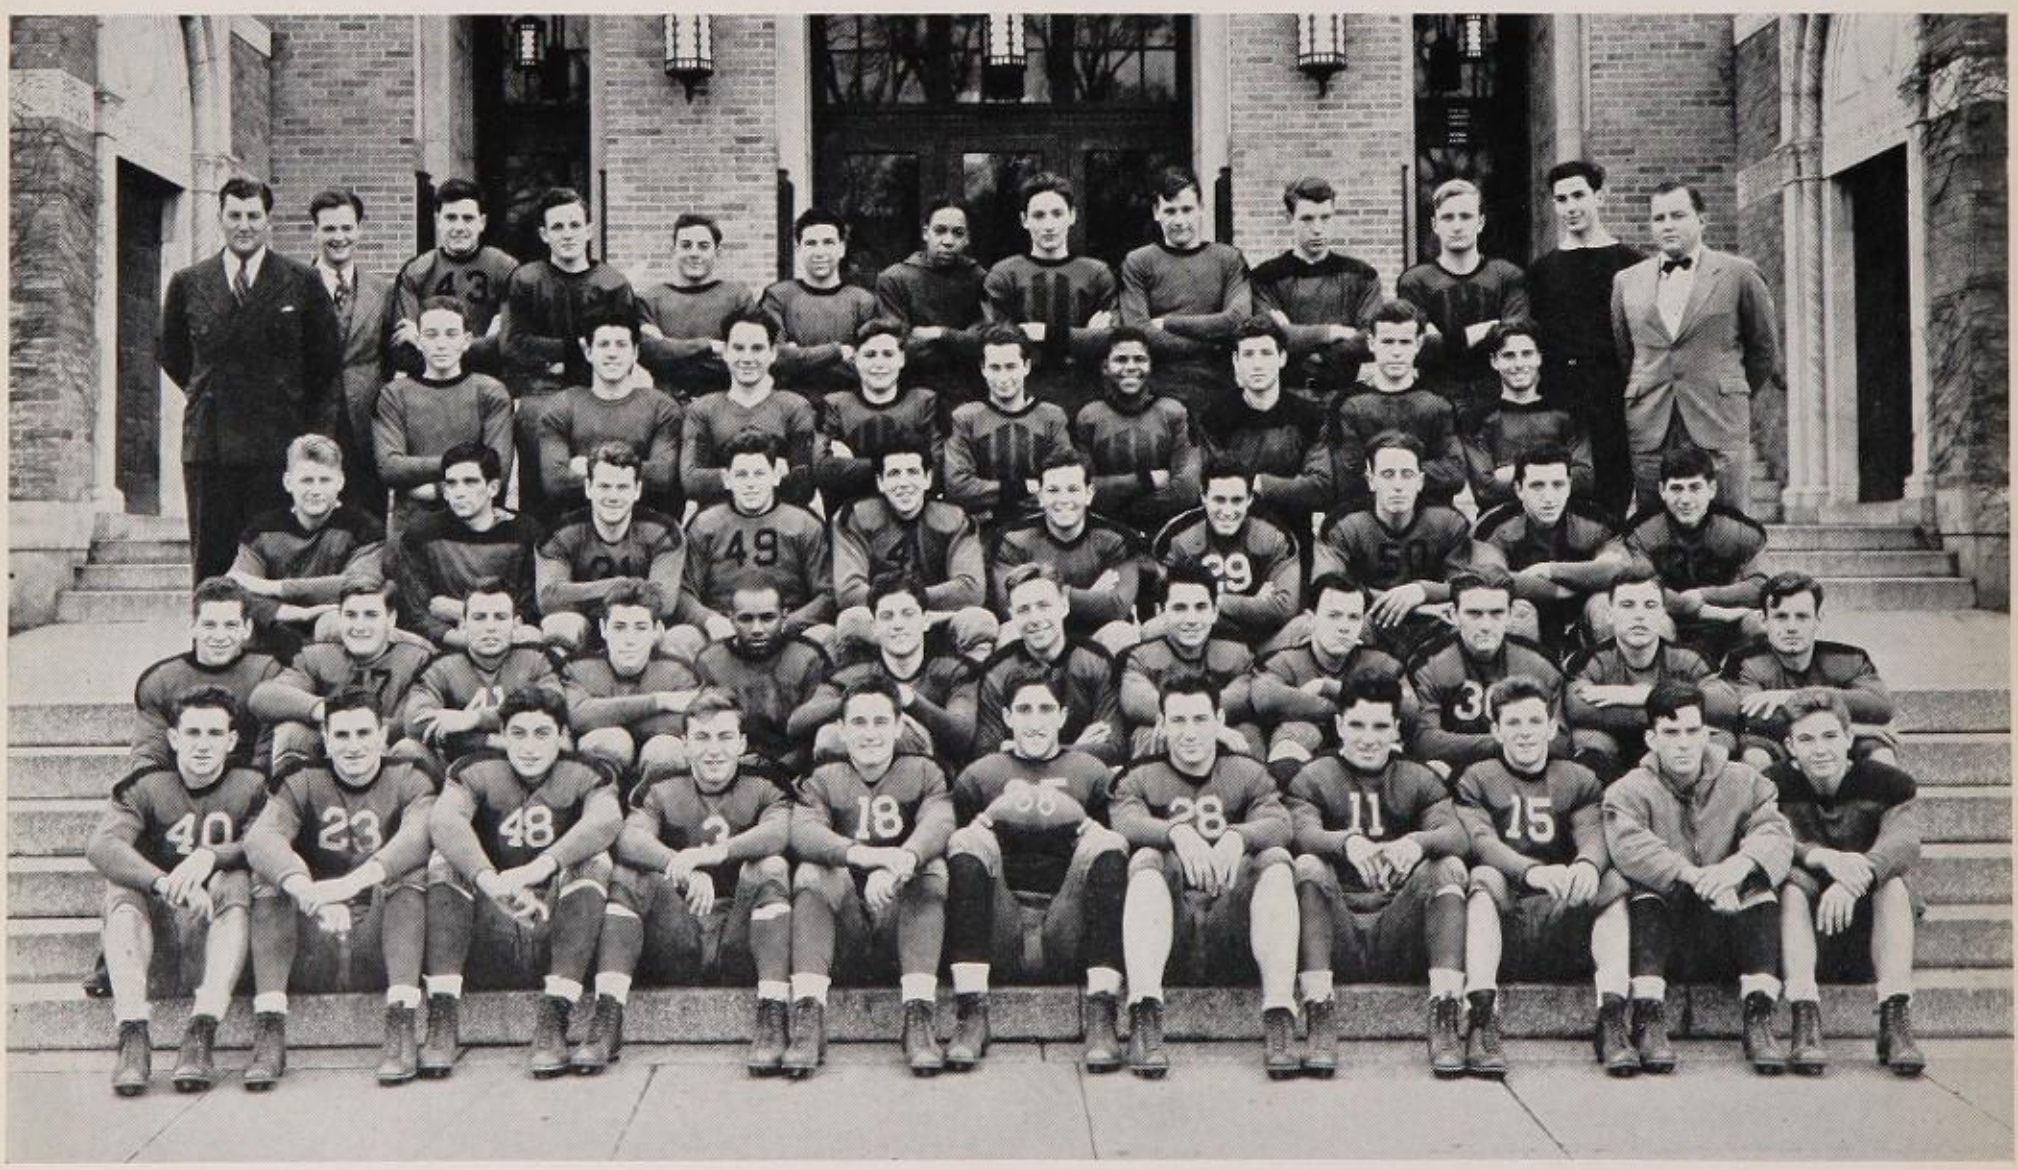
On Election Day, Governor Lehman took Thomas Dewey into camp and Clinton, likewise, took Stuyvesant into camp in their traditional tilt, 19-0. A driving rain storm slowed down the offensives of both teams; however, Jackie Beall sprinted for 55- and 80-yard touchdown jaunts and Clem Green, making his belated debut, also crashed over for a tally.

Having accustomed themselves to rainy weather, the Mosholumen tackled Monroe in another downpour on November 19, winning out in the final minutes on a blocked kick, 8-7. With Monroe leading 7-6 and two minutes remaining to play, Captain Joe Casale broke through to block a Monroe kick in the end-zone for a safety and victory. Helio Lefkowitz took Tracy's pass for the Red and Black touchdown.

The traditional and colorful Turkey Day classic with Commerce was marred by a snowfall, but victory was still sweet, 18-0. In this game Bill Tracy rang down the curtain on a spectacular scholastic football career by scoring two touchdowns. Clem Green bulled his way into pay-off territory for the third tally.

The team consisted of: Helio Lefkowitz, Henry Fatowe, Charles Cerrato,

FOOTBALL TEAM



Jerry Fleming, and Steve Scapenic, ends; Irwin Gersh, Jerry Schwartz, John Sheridan, and Joe Haaf, tackles; Felix Endico, Walter Bentley, and Irwin Chaitin, guards; Joe Casale, captain, Seymour Geller, and Jim Poris, centers; Jack Beall, Vinnie Pesature, Al Feigelson, and Joe Liscio, quarterbacks; Bill Tracy, Tom Wolfe, Rocco Petruzzi, Jack Hughes, Gene Moschella, and Norton Codish, halfbacks; and Edgar Bradley and Clem Green, fullbacks. Seymour Berry was manager.

Swing High, Swing Low

Rebounding from last season's dismal record of one victory against four defeats in P.S.A.L. competition, the freebooters went through this year's campaign undefeated, although tied four times. Nevertheless, they were the only Clinton athletic squad to go through the term unbeaten.

The lone victory was registered against Morris, in a thrilling struggle, 2-1; while the ties were gained against Haaren, Evander, Monroe, and Commerce.

SOCCER TEAM

CHEERLEADERS

Monroe, although held to a 2-2 deadlock by the Red and Black booters, went on to capture the Bronx-Manhattan championship of the P.S.A.L. Soccer League. Evander, also tied by the Mosholumen, finished second.

The outstanding players were Co-Captains Jerry Schoenbaum, and Irving Mintzer, while Joe Procaccino, Jucky Sanderov, Joe Helmreich, and Leroy Greenspan also starred. Others on the team included Irving Mankuta, "Red" Willick, Seymour Green, and James Borrelli. Herb Schapira was the manager.

All the varsity men will receive Major "C" 's this season as a ruling of the G.O. Executive Council last spring made soccer a major sport. Because of this ruling two teachers directed the activities. Mr. William Gaffney acted as coach, while Mr. Alfred Whitehill was faculty adviser.

You're Here, You're There . . .

Heavily hit by "old man diploma" and a series of other misfortunes, the harriers ran often, but got nowhere this season. Handicapped by the loss of Fred Araujo, Harry Howell, and Bob Koller, the cross-country team did as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Coach William Flynn had several scrappy runners on hand who at least made things interesting for the opposition. However, since most of the boys will be back again next year, the outlook for '39 is very brilliant.

The harriers started out by dropping two dual meets with Bishop Loughlin and John Adams. Following this, they finished eighth in two warm up runs sponsored by the P.S.A.L. Morris and Monroe then nosed out Clinton for the Bronx title for the first time in twelve years.

The hill-and-dalers wound up the season by placing seventh in the City Champs. Al Thompson, Hans Schwartz, Joe Becker, Charley Nickens, Bernie Goldenberg, and Pat O'Neill comprised the team. Bert Silberman was captain and Bob Brogely manager.

How Dry I Am!

Out of a difficult nine meet swimming schedule the Clinton natators have already met five enemies and have come out of battle victorious on four occasions.

The Red and Black team led by Captain Dick MacCarthy, coached by Mr. Bill Chambers, and composed of Bob Dennerlein, Ben Squires, Maurice Silverman, Bob Winkler, Allen Kavner, George Leidener, Bert Astrove, and the relay team of Gabby Housner, Lloyd Goldson, Johnny Pagano, and Dick MacCarthy, defeated Roosevelt in the first meet of the season and followed this victory with decisive wins over Commerce and Seward Park on successive Saturdays. However in their fourth start the tide of victory was turned by a strong Textile aggregation. Undaunted, the Mosholu men came back to win the highly coveted Brother against Brother meet, conquering Monroe's team, prodigies of Coach Matt Chambers.

In three of the four victories rung up this term the mermen made very impressive showings, capturing every first place but one in each meet. The Textile contest was the most closely contested of all the meets with the down-towners coming out on top by a narrow margin.

The Clinton team still must face Stuyvesant, Haaren, Washington, and Evander Childs. The Peglegs and the Trojans are expected to give the Red and Black little trouble, as the team primes itself for the more difficult encounters with Haaren and Evander. At present Clinton and Evander are tied for second place in the Bronx-Manhattan division. Should Textile be defeated the Clinton-Evander meet will assume greater importance as the winner will be tied with Textile for first place.

The city-wide meets in January will be the final testing ground, and Clinton is expected to come out at the top.
